IWO JIMA 1945

America's Oldest and Most Experienced Military History Tour Operator

The Japanese fortified island of Iwo Jima lays half way between Japan and the American B29 airfields of Saipan, Tinian and Guam. Japanese fighters flew from Iwo Jima to harass the B29 bombers heading for Japan. Iwo Jima needed to be captured to not only prevent fighter attacks on the B29's, but to offer sanctuary for those bombers returning from Japan who were damaged in action. The amphibious assault by the U.S. 3rd, 4th and 5th Marines were launched on February 19, 1945 on this volcanic island about eight square miles in size and comprised of volcanic ash and rock. Five days after the assault began, Associated Press photographer Joe Rosenthal's took a picture of the second flag raising on Mt. Suribachi, which became one of the most recognized photos of WWII. Iwo Jima proved its worth when a damaged American B29 made an emergency landing on March 4th, three weeks before the island was secured. Medals of Honor were awarded to twenty-seven Marines and sailors for their bravery at Iwo Jima, more than any other single operation during WWII.

"We think Valor did an excellent job of setting up the itinerary, getting rooms, and putting all the "stuff" in one bag. You were responsive and efficient. Well done. We think Andy is just plain top notch. The Pacific battles are really personal for him, with his Dad and Uncle, and he really did an excellent job—both in herding cats (i.e., us!), making sure nobody got too tired or hurt, and being interesting."
